

Nick Andrew Staver continues to emerge in the American Roots & Blues scene as a captivating songwriter and storyteller.

With home in Pennsylvania, it's been the American road experience that has shaped his personality both on stage & off.

In benefit and hindrance.

But with touring at a halt in 2020, writing and recording the album "Medicine" was a safety harness to command Nick's attention.

And continues strong today into the new year.

After cancelling 2020 tours meant to support the new album, Nick took to supporting local businesses with online performances and eventually in-person social distant friendly gigs during the summer before returning to the studio to recording a followup acoustic album, Medicine Acoustic.

Nick anxiously waits for the roads to open in 2021, behind the release of a new single "If Only I Were Like The River," to take "Medicine" into the listening rooms that are the framework of the American music experience.
